91st Annual Meeting of the American Branch of the International Law Association

Law in the Time of Cholera: Haiti's Epidemic, the UN and the Responsibilities of International Organizations

Haiti is suffering from a cholera epidemic that has been attributed to waste management practices on a United Nations peacekeeper base. The epidemic is now the worst single country cholera epidemic in modern history. Haiti's cholera epidemic and the UN response to it is an excellent touchstone to explore the UN's responsibility to provide a fair forum for personal injury claims arising out of peacekeeping operations. The panel will explore UN liability for the Haiti cholera epidemic in the context of the UN Status of Forces Agreement's immunity provisions and of the developing law on accountability of international organizations.

Panelists include experts who were on the ground in Haiti and responded to the outbreak, international legal experts, and lawyers who filed a groundbreaking case on behalf of 5,000 victims of cholera seeking compensation from the UN.
