

Conversation between Me. Roland Weyl, IADL's First Vice President (France) and Luis Roberto Zamora Bolanos, IADL Bureau Member (Costa Rica).

[This is a roughly edited draft by IADL Alternate U.N. Representative Beth Lyons of the correspondence so far. Please note that the text is subject to review and correction by the participants]

Luis Roberto Zamora Bolaños:

Thank you again for giving me the privilege to interview you.

Ok my friend,

Here is the first question.

By 1946, the war was over and Europe had to be rebuilt. What moved you and the other founders to start an organization of jurists? International law was still in its early stages and the League of Nations had proven a disaster for the rule of international law. Why did you opt for a legal oriented organization? What were most of the other organizations focused on?

Roland Weyl:

Indeed, I was not one of the founders of IADL, because I was too young lawyer (25!). I only was attending the Founding Assembly, initiated by the French « Judiciary National Movement » which previously was the French underground movement of resistance during the Nazi occupation. Its Secretary- General Joe Nordmann had the opportunity to be at the Nuremberg Tribunal, and agreed with lawyers from England, USA and USSR, to create this association. This is why the Founding Assembly of IADL was a meeting of the JNM in , but attended by the highest representatives of Judicial branches throughout the world (Presidents of Bars, Prosecutors, Presidents of Courts. A copy of the French Judiciary Gazette will be on display in Lisbon at the exhibition on the 70th anniversary of IADL.

The aim was not in the framework of rebuilding Europe. There was no specific treatment of Europe at this time (which had been a matter of Nazi propaganda!).

Just coming out of WW2, the aim was: « never again ! ». The aim was for peace, peaceful coexistence and relations between different economic and politic systems, and for the abolition of nuclear weapons.

And, in 1945 with the birth of the UN Charter, IADL was to serve the same aims and abide by the same rules. In 1945, UNO [the United Nations] was built to implement the law of the UN Charter. The following year, in 1946, IADL was built also to implement the UN Charter. I like to say that IADL is a twin sister of UNO.

It is why you cannot refer to the disaster of League of Nations. It is an usual mistake to say that UNO is a second shape of the League : While UNO is made by Charter to implement international law, to put an end to the millenium of competition between powers out of any international law, the League was an agreement between powers out of edicting any universal international law based on peoples' sovereignty.

And as war was a product of Nazism, i.e. of fascism, IADL was devoted to peace and civil liberties and human rights, and therefore struggle against surviving fascisms (in Spain and Portugal).

.And it is also why, since its beginning, on the basis of the UN Charter principle of self determination of peoples. IADL fought against colonialism and in support and solidarity of national movements of liberation.

And it is because all that was built on the basic principle of rule of law. IADL proceeded from the specific accountability of lawyers within and outside institutional organs, and on the side of the peoples' struggles.

[As to other organizations], I am unable to answer this: I do not have any list of other organisations and don't remember - that there where so many!

LRZB: So, the Founding Congress of the IADL took place. Were you there at the Assembly? Who were, according your opinion, those participants who impressed you the most? What was the event that made you stand with this IADL flag for 70 years now? Do you have any special memory of the Founding Congress?

RW:

I was one among many to attend, but not the organiser. And as others, I became member as soon as IADL was founded.

The reason was to participate as lawyer to fight on grounds of law for the restoration of democracy, for peace and solidarity against fascism remaining abroad and colonialism (including the French one)..

At the time of its founding, the participants of the Founding Assembly were the most proeinent Presidents of Bars, Prosecutors and judges of Europe and USA.

About specific individuals, I must refer namely to Joe Nordmann, who was the very maker of IADL. He was a lawyer in Paris, 10 years older than I. During the Nazi occupation, he was the main activist and organiser of the French underground movement of resistance in the judiciary As such he was active in corridors of Nuremberg, and there he gathered British, US and Soviet lawyers to form IADL. Its Founding Congress was in Paris, in the very solemn great room of the Supreme Court (Cour de Cassation), and was organised under the patronage of the French movement of underground which had become official.

I would also refer to the first President of IADL, René Cassin, Judge at the Supreme Administrative Court of France, who became the main drafter of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

There were also several members of the French staff of prosecutors of Nuremberg, and also the English second president DN Pritt, an English fighter against English colonialism.

LRZB: You were 25 years old “back in the day.” What was the future looking like for a young lawyer like you? What were the fears and the motivations?

Why didn't you stay home -- instead of taking action? What moved you to go forward - at that young age?

LRZB: Nowadays, you get out of high school at age 18 or 17 and then it takes up to 5 years to get your diploma as a lawyer. So now, you became a lawyer at age 22, or 23.

RW: No, I became a lawyer at 20 years of age; it was 3 years, not 5 years, to get a diploma.

RW: Je suis surpris de la question ::25 ans n'était pas tellement jeune :J'ai actuellement le titre officiel de Doyen du Barreau de Paris, parce que j'ai prêté serment d'avocat à 20 ans, comme beaucoup d'autres, après avoir fini les études secondaires en 1936 et fait mes études de droit de 1936 à 1939. Mais il y eu la guerre et l'occupation nazie, et je n'ai pu commencer à exercer la profession qu'en 1945.

J'y avais été entraîné et préparé par mon père qui était avocat depuis 1908 (son père, donc mon grand-père, était juge et son père, mon arrière-grand-père était huissier. Si bien que quand mon fils Frédéric et ma fille France qui sont avocats depuis environs 40 ans sont la 5è génération judiciaire, dont j'ai été la 4è.

Mais à ça s'ajoutait un engagement politique dès l'âge de 15 ans. Je n'étais pas le seul. C'était en 1934, quand Hitler venait d'arriver au pouvoir, et il y avait des tentatives fascistes en France. Avec d'autres, nous nous battions dans notre établissement scolaires contre les jeunes fascistes, et en 1936 nous avons fêté le Front Populaire.

A cela s'ajoutait encore l'éducation de ma mère qui, d'avoir vécu la première guerre mondiale était obsédée de la paix

L'agression et l'occupation nazies ont fait le reste On a participé à la résistance du mieux possible et la poussée démocratique de la Libération a été une école extraordinaire où voulant m'engager pour participer à un pouvoir citoyen organisé et voyant le comportement des différents partis politiques, je choisisais le communisme comme étant pour moi la seule option crédible pour une autre société

Mon éducation familiale et l'école de la vie se sont confondues en lutte générale pour la justice pas seulement judiciaire mais sociale. Et là je dois beaucoup à l'apport de mes aînés, notamment les avocats Marcel Willard, qui avait été l'avocat de Dimitroff à Leipzig, avait écrit un livre « la Défense accuse », et Joe Nordmann

J'ai écrit cela dans un livre qui s'appelle « une robe pour un combat » (la robe étant le vêtement de l'avocat quand il plaide)

LRZB: Why do you say that the IADL is a twin sister of the Charter?

RW: I always say that IADL is the twin sister of UNO because both are daughters of the Charter, because both were born in 1946, the charter being from 1945, and both devoted to its implementation.

The support of peoples fighting for their freedom was a tradition in France, a tradition among progressive forces. The Communist Party was fighting against the colonialist war in Morocco already in 1920.

And DN Pritt in England had been the lawyer of Kenyatta (for instance). Don't seek for specific historical reasons, it was a tradition of all progressive forces everywhere since a long time for justice freedom and solidarity, on the basis of the idea that a people oppressing another is not itself a free people.

LRZB: Was the support to colonized countries a reaction to the liberation from oppression within Europe?

RW: Maybe I was wrong to speak about "Europe", not taking care that now "Europe" is understood as a whole. I should speak about colonialist European countries, which were France, Spain and Portugal. Nevertheless, let us not forget the Conference of Berlin at the end of 19th century as an agreement of sharing colonial domination between European countries. But the struggle against colonialism was not a problem for Europe but for colonised countries (Algeria, Vietnam, Mozambique, and so on, which fought for their liberation). And we cannot forget that 1945 was, in the direct following of the lessons of two world wars, the UN Charter, proclaiming the right of peoples to their self determination. While IADL was born as a daughter of the Charter, it was normal that they support this struggle.

LRZB: You say there were three main issues for the recently founded IADL: 1, fight against fascism; 2. restoration of democracy and 3. end of European colonialism.

The first two seem very evident. The WWII has just finished, fascism had to be eliminated and democracy was weak. Now, having Europe with so many problems after the war, why did the end of colonialism become such an important struggle for the IADL? What I want to ask is, Europe was in a bad situation and shape. Other people would think about rebuilding their "home" first, and then, secondly, about rebuilding that "home" of other - but, on the contrary, IADL incorporated the liberation of colonies within its struggle. Why was it so important?

Editor's note: Roland Weyl discusses this in the answers above.

LRZB: Please forgive me if I ask any silly questions. There are so many things I don't know.... and this conversation is getting more and more interesting.

So, the founding congress of IADL took place and then many young lawyers joined. What was the first mission in which you enrolled? What do you remember was your first action as IADL member? (In my case, I attended the Paris conference on the Stockholm appeal).

Did you engage first with the liberation of Algeria? Or was it something else?

Editor's note: These questions will be answered in the next conversations!

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF LISBON

THE 50th ANNIVERSARY OF INTERNATIONAL COVENANTS

ON HUMAN RIGHTS

An International Conference will be taking place in Lisbon, from 10th to 12th November, in order to mark the 50th Anniversary of the International Covenants on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and Civil and Political Rights as well, approved by the General Assembly of U.N.O.

The Conference will be held in the academic premises of the Law Faculty of the University of Lisbon; and will function in plenary sessions and commissions, the main purpose being that of a collective reflection on the historical meaning, the political and juridical views and contingencies of the two above mentioned International Covenants.

We're expecting a big number of communications to be presented on relevant themes such as the historical and juridical insertions of the two Covenants; the actual context of international law on human rights and their indivisibility; the conditioning of their respective practice; the problems of world and regional peace; the rights of the peoples for economic, social and cultural developments and the just use of national resources; the struggle of the peoples and their social organizations for the effective recognition and the conditions to exercise the human rights, and against all forms of exclusion and social distinctions, and so on.....

The Conference that is fostered by the International Association of Democratic Jurists and the Portuguese Association of Democratic Jurists, is opened to all those jurists and non-jurists, who are interested on human rights issues, in their real emancipated expression; with assured certainty that the Covenants are two fundamental pointing marks in the international juridical order, expressing the bond of the subscribing countries to a meaningful bunch of duties through which economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights of the citizens therein proclaimed are to be assured (alias, as the extension of the universal principles contained in the U.N.O. Chart and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights dated 10/12/1948).

But the history of the human rights is not only that of their international recognition – but also of their blatant and systematic violation.

One thing is the argumentative rhetoric concerning the human rights (and their proclamation in internal and international law texts; in the political agents' speeches; in the critical thinking of the philosophers and jurists); another, a different one, is the full faced reality with which the peoples are confronted during the last 50 years.

When discussions that lead to the formation and the voting for the two Pacts began, there was a confrontation between the liberal thought that privileged the civil and political rights, and the position of the then socialist countries giving a special relevance to the economic, social and cultural rights. Such a cleavage gave way to the approval of two Pacts (instead of a genuine one dealing with the recognition of the whole range of rights).

And the truth is that, in this troublesome world, due to the impact of more conservative and discriminatory social and political forces, human rights continue being somewhat relinquished everywhere. According to Prof. Juan Antonio Carillo Salcedo, lecturing Public International law at the University of Seville "human beings are divided, in a sort of a global apartheid, into two big sectors: one, respecting those for whom human rights are a daily reality, and the one respecting those for whom the human rights are goals to struggle for"(1); in such terms that International Amnesty has been referring the matter as broken promises, further specifying that "how far indeed we are from the common ideal proclaimed in 1948", starting with the marginalization of many rights, as is the case of economic, social and cultural rights, " rhetorically emphasized but never really and resolutely dealt with by the United Nations" (2)

In the same way, and referring the Universal Declaration, Prof. Joaquin Garcia Morillo highlighted that "the General Assembly of the United nations had the pretension to proclaim a new international order that, being based on the military victory of the allied forces and on an antifascist impulse, should be founded on liberty and assure a minimum level of rights, more adjustable to a generally shared idea on human dignity"; however, throughout the world, "millions of people see the execution of their fundamental rights seriously limited, when not strictly denied, and millions remain marginalized from the circuits that compose a developed society" (3).

It is obvious that the Lisbon Conference is not set out to discover any miraculous solution for such difficult and complex problems; but surely to speak about them – with due emphasis, shout on their behalf – as a specific contribution for the formation and enlargement of a civic conscience involved with human rights, in their real and truly emancipative e liberating interpretation.

It should be mentioned that the Lisbon Conference, besides being an opportunity for a profound reflection on such relevant issues for our living and the future of the peoples the world over, will also be a meeting corner and provide a feast of confraternization among jurists, academicians, trade-unionists and others alike, coming from different countries but all united by the same ideal of a free human being, freed from fear and misery (as is mentioned in the two Pacts).

You are welcomed e will be received fraternally.

1. This Conference is jointly convened by the International Association of Democratic Lawyers (IADL) and by the Portuguese Association of Democratic Jurists (PADJ). It will be held in Lisbon on 10th, 11th and 12th November 2016. Its aim is to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the adoption by the General Assembly of the United Nations of the International Covenant on Social, Economic and Cultural Rights and of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

2. The main theme of the Conference will be: "The International Covenants on Human Rights (ICESCR and ICCPR) adopted by the UN on 16 December 1966: historical significance; political and legal impact; and fortunes".

3. The Conference will have both plenary sessions and panel discussions, according to the following rules:

3.1. There will be an opening plenary session on 10 November and a closing plenary session on 12 November (afternoon). The topics for these sessions and their keynote speakers will be announced by the organising committee in due time.

3.2. On 11 November (whole day) and 12 November (morning only) the following three panels will be held:

Panel 1 – The Covenants' historical and legal background:

Suggested topics, inter alia:

- The Universal Declaration of Human Rights of 10/12/1948 and the International Covenants of 1966: historical significance; political and legal impact;

- Human rights and fundamental rights; indivisibility of human rights;
- International human rights law.

Panel 2 – Globalisation and human rights:

Suggested topics, inter alia:

- Proclamation of rights and constraints to the exercise of rights;
- World and regional peace: current issues;
- The right of peoples to self-determination (economic, social and cultural development).

Panel 3 – The struggle(s) for human rights in today's world.

Suggested topics, inter alia:

- Struggles of peoples and their social organizations for the acknowledgment and exercise of their human rights;
- Struggles against all forms of social exclusion or differentiation (the situation of women, children, the elderly, the disabled, etc.);
- Systems for protecting human rights.

4. In their papers, participants may address any subject related to the two International Covenants of 1966 and the rights proclaimed therein (such as the right to work; to an adequate standard of living; to fair remuneration, social security, healthcare, education, to take part in cultural life; the right to form and join trade unions; etc.), discussing them from the perspective of the broad topics indicated for one or the other panels.

5. The Conference will be open to the participation of jurists as well as non-jurists from all over the world. The deadline for registration (using the attached registration form) is 15 October 2016.

6. Participants wishing to present papers before the Conference should signal their intent at the time of registration, indicating the subjects of their choice within the broader theme of the Conference. They should also submit a summary (or, if they so wish, the full text) of their papers.

7. Registration is free of charge.

8. Papers should include some findings and/or recommendations to be included in the minutes of the panels and in the Conference's final declaration.

9. The Organizing Committee will allocate participants to the different panels on the basis of the registration forms submitted.

10. The Organizing Committee may establish other 'ad hoc' panels besides the three panels indicated above if the variety of papers submitted justifies such decision.

11. The panels will have one or more coordinators, to be appointed by the Organizing Committee.

12. The coordinators shall decide on the time allocated to each speaker; select the papers to be published; and draft the various panels' findings and recommendations on the basis of the papers presented.

13. The Organizing Committee may invite keynote speakers, whether jurists or not, to make initial addresses to the various panels to introduce the topics to be discussed.

14. The findings of the various panels will be submitted to the plenary session for final adoption.

Declaration of the Portuguese Association of Democratic Lawyers (APJD) on the situation in Turkey

The Portuguese Association of Democratic Lawyers (APJD) manifests its deepest concern for the deterioration of civil and political rights in Turkey, after the attempted military coup of July 15th.

For some time APJD and the International Association of Democratic Lawyers (IADL) have demonstrated this concern and vehemently denounced the systematic trampling of fundamental rights of Turkish citizens, namely restrictions upon freedom of expression, assembly and demonstration, arbitrary detentions, permanent mandatory curfews imposed upon populations, the systematic violence against populations, assassination of activists, massacres, disappearances and torture.

On March 15th of this year the IADL and the Europe-Third World Centre (CETIM) had already presented, during the 31st Session of the Human Rights Council of the UN, a declaration on the situation in Turkey appealing to Member States to call for a special session of that Council to debate the serious situation in the country and create an International Commission of Inquiry.

This situation in Turkey, a member country of NATO, worsens the already concerning global situation. Among other aspects, there is a general offensive against political civil, economic and social rights of citizens, the perpetuation of military conflicts and the creation of new conflicts (Afghanistan, Iraq, Libya, Ukraine, Syria...), the increase in the number of refugees, the increase in security measures in Europe, the grave changes to the emergency state law in France.

The Portuguese Association of Democratic Lawyers condemns the violations of fundamental rights in Turkey and the violent repression exercised over its citizens and institutions, outside State Law and the Human Rights Covenants.

The year when we commemorate the 50th anniversary of the approval by the UN of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, which APJD and IADL will mark with a Conference (November 10-12th, 2016 in the Law College of Lisbon), we underline the imperative need that all citizens intervene in the defense of the civil, political, economic and social rights, and for freedom and peace in the World.

Statement of IADL on the UN Arbitral Tribunal's ruling in Philippines v China

The International Association of Democratic Lawyers (IADL) is a non-governmental organization with consultative status before the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations (ECOSOC). IADL was established in 1946 to support and uphold international law, and to protect the rights of nations to development, economic equality and access to scientific achievements as well as their own natural resources.

IADL has for many years called for the peaceful resolution of disputes in the South China Sea in accordance with international law. IADL has done this because these disputes pose a threat to regional and international peace and security, stability, co-operation and development. At its 2015 Bureau meeting in December in Paris, IADL passed a resolution, which expresses support for the implementation of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (UNCLOS).

IADL is aware of the claim made by the Philippines against China to the permanent Court of Arbitration. IADL believes this claim is consistent with its support for peaceful resolution of disputes using international law.

On July 12, 2016, the UN Arbitral Tribunal decided the territorial dispute over the South China Sea between the Republic of the Philippines and the People's Republic of China, using the UNCLOS as its basis. The Tribunal dismissed China's claims of historic rights over resources in the sea areas falling within the 'nine-dash line', declared the status of features in the Spratly Islands, and denounced China for failing to protect and preserve the marine environment.

IADL believes this to be a definitive ruling by the body charged with interpreting UNCLOS. However, more must be addressed in order to ensure peace, stability, cooperation and development in the South China Sea and the Asia-Pacific region. These issues include the protection of the rights of all nations to development, economic equality access to scientific achievements and control over natural resources, under the basic principles of the UN Charter, self-determination of peoples through their respective states, and equality between small and large nations.

IADL is aware that China has stated it does not recognize the decision of the Permanent Court of Arbitration. IADL reasserts the urgent need for negotiations among the coastal States of the South China Sea in order to reach a peaceful solution of all aspects of the existing dispute. That negotiation must be informed by international law and seek in good faith a solution to be agreed upon by all parties and calls upon all parties to avoid activities which escalate tension and militarization in the South China Sea.

To this end IADL support the conference of experts and lawyers promoted by the Institute of International Legal Studies to be held in Rome on December 2, 2016, with the participation of qualified delegations from all concerned countries and the scientific community.

Supporting the renewed peace process:

A call for international solidarity for a just and lasting peace in the Philippines

During the recent exploratory talks on the 14–15th of June in Oslo, Norway, representatives from the Government of the Republic of the Philippines (GRP) and the National Democratic Front of the Philippines (NDF) affirmed previous commitments, as well as: the acceleration of the peace negotiations centering on key issues; immediate release of key consultants; reconstitution of the JASIG; and general amnesty for over 500 political detainees as part of confidence-building measures. Interim ceasefire is set to take place within the month, and within the year, deals on socioeconomic, political and constitutional reforms are anticipated. These would be followed by the end of hostilities and the disposition of forces.

This is an unprecedented opportunity that has arisen under the administration of President Rodrigo Duterte. The willingness expressed by the newly elected president to release political detainees is a promising sign. Doing so would indicate a higher level of respect for commitments and for human wellbeing than has been exhibited by past administrations, and would serve as a crucial corrective to the current sour state of the peace negotiations.

The Philippines is a nation under multiple conflicts, including the now 47-year civil war between the Philippine government and the NDF, which represents the Communist Party of the Philippines (CPP) and the New People's Army (NPA). The disputes that the NDF and many other groups have with the GRP, among other concerns, are matters of social justice and equity and equality of the current national development path. Some of these groups represent and consist of populations that have been denied the benefits of development. Some of them, as in the experiences of the Moro people and the indigenous Lumad, have in addition been oppressed by the GRP's armed forces, both directly and through widely reported extra-judicial killings.

Even in its own analysis, the GRP has identified the following as the main causes of internal conflict: abject poverty, corruption, failures of the justice system, human rights violations, disputes over land, ownership and use of natural resources, marginalization of Lumad and indigenous cultural communities, and the lack of respect and recognition of ancestral domain and indigenous people's rights.

Though rich in terms of agricultural resources, the Philippine economy remains highly controlled by foreign interests and by local elites, whose dominance is evidenced in their near-monopolization of land and the prevalence of import-dependent and export-oriented businesses. These factors have combined to yield the starkly unequal outcomes and worsening poverty for the majority, which the NDF-CPP-NPA has identified as the grounds for its opposition to the GRP.

Yet, initiated in 1992 with the GRP and NDF signing of The Hague Joint Declaration (THJD), the peace negotiations have faced several challenges, despite the recognition by all parties of the roots of the conflict. The most recent of these challenges has been GRP non-compliance, under the Aquino administration, concerning the Joint Agreement on Safety and Immunity Guarantees (JASIG) signed in 1995. Under the JASIG, consultants and other personnel are granted immunity from surveillance, harassment, search, arrest, interrogation, detention, prosecution and similar punitive actions.

Despite the GRP's participation in this agreement, Philippine people's rights organization KARAPATAN reports that, of the current 557 political detainees, 19 are in fact NDF consultants. Their detention has constituted a major obstacle to progress in the peace negotiations. This violation of the JASIG, and the outright refusal of the GRP to resume, has left the peace negotiations stalled for the last four years.

Among the detainees, moreover, are 88 suffering serious illnesses and 51 seniors. Their release would be a much-needed expression of humanitarian concern, which could set the tone and act as a foundation for a negotiated settlement.

The peace negotiations have far-reaching implications for Philippine democracy and for national development. Both issues relate directly to each component of the agenda for the negotiations established in THJD, signed by both the GRP and the NDF. The agenda-points are: (1) human rights and humanitarian law; (2) socio-economic reforms; (3) political and constitutional reforms; and (4) the end of hostilities and the disposition of forces. This agenda provides ample room to begin addressing the roots of the conflict in a comprehensive manner.

Efforts by past administrations to address these roots have been sorely lacking, and in some instances highly counterproductive. This is because the efforts have often been militarized and have not coincided with qualitative changes in governance. A comprehensive solution must involve reforms to governance institutions, mechanisms and processes to render government more accountable and accessible to people. The negotiations can serve as a starting point.

The resumption of formal peace negotiations are scheduled at either the end of July, or the beginning of August this year.

Now more than ever, there is a need for increased international support for the Philippine peace process. A variety of individuals, organizations, institutions and governments around the world have provided crucial support for the process in the past. Norway, for example, made a bold move in 2006 by deciding not to recognize the outdated and biased US and EU "terror list," on which was included the name of NDF chief consultant Jose Maria Sison. Furthermore, due in part to Pres. Duterte's commitment to being personally involved in the peace process, international attention has heightened. This heightened attention can translate into valuable support.

Support the NDF-GRP peace process!

Address the root causes of the armed conflict!

Release all political prisoners!

Struggle for a just and lasting peace!

Long live international solidarity!

NGO Committee on the Status of Women, Vienna

Written Statement submitted to UN Women for CSW 61

Women's Economic Empowerment in the Changing World of Work

The International Association of Democratic Lawyers and the undersigned non-governmental organizations in consultative status with ECOSOC and member organisations of the NGO Committee on the Status of Women Vienna present the following statement to the members and observers of the 61st UN Commission on the Status of Women:

Economic empowerment of women is essential to enhance gender equality and secure women's equal status and participation in every professional, social and political field. Access to resources is as important for achieving independent lives as education, ability or place of origin, and the contribution of women as equal partners in modern economies is a prerequisite for sustainable development.

Considering that implementation of the SDGs would further enhance gender equality and empowerment of women in the economic sphere, thereby benefitting individuals, families, and communities and contributing to stronger, more cohesive societies;

Recognizing that legal status does not always reflect the real status in society, and that legal discrimination continues to exist, e.g. laws governing inheritance or ownership of land and property;

Underlining that education is critical for achieving equality;

Stressing that gender-specific health care should cover the entire lifespan of girls and women and not be limited to sexual and reproductive health, and that health in the workplace is important in economic participation in industrial as well as emerging economies;

Demanding the full implementation of ILO Conventions that commit to ensure decent work and gender equality in the workplace;

Reiterating that the elimination of all forms of violence against women in both public and private spheres is critical in the fight against inequality, as violence is often used for domination and intimidation;

Stressing that, as funding activities to empower women is necessary to create a level playing field, this funding cannot depend on voluntary donations, but must be included in public spending;

Calling for the adoption of gender budgeting as a tool to analyse public spending, budgets and final accounts to ensure a fair and transparent distribution of public funds by all member states and international organizations;

To ensure the full economic empowerment of women by 2030, the undersigned member organisations of the NGO Committee on the Status of Women Vienna submit recommendations for consideration by the members and observers of CSW61:

- a) Equal access to affordable education (primary, secondary and tertiary) is a prerequisite to women's economic equality. Education should not focus on gender, but on abilities and talents, and train girls and women to lead and to work in teams. Science and mathematics as well as IT training should be emphasized;
- b) Women and men must be paid equally for work of equal value, have equal access to training and promotion, equal opportunities to choose working hours, holidays and fringe benefits, and enjoy the rights to freedom of association and collective bargaining, and childcare and child services are essential;
- c) Programmes are needed to enhance occupational health and safety for women, taking differing needs in different jobs into consideration;
- d) Legislation should be developed and enforced to support gender equality and eliminate obstacles in the workplace and in societies, including measures such as quotas on Boards and more equal sharing of family responsibilities, for example regarding care-taking and parental leave;
- e) Creation of a level playing field includes the elimination of gender stereotypes and religious and traditional culture-based roles for women;
- f) Elimination of all forms of violence against women includes prevention of new forms such as cyber-bullying and cyber-harassing, as well as structural violence and abuse;
- g) Implementation of sustainable development measures and fair trade practices will serve to strengthen the global economy and avoid austerity measures;
- h) Development assistance programmes and countries' budgets are to be analysed, monitored and evaluated considering the female economic dimension to eliminate negative impacts on women;
- i) Training, mentoring and financial support as well as training in the use of banking systems are necessary to promote women entrepreneurs;
- j) Investment in local, regional and national infrastructure should provide women with improved, safe access to public transportation and market facilities;
- k) The needs of woman refugees, migrant workers, rural and indigenous women and women with special needs must be considered in employment policies and provision of social and health services;
- l) Research into alternative economic systems should be undertaken, including development and application of indicators to measure and evaluate the contribution of unpaid work;
- m) The essential work of women's civil society organisations must be recognised, valued and supported.

MEDIA STATEMENT

USA / People of African descent: UN expert group condemns recent killings

GENEVA (8 July 2016) – Human rights expert Ricardo A. Sunga III, who currently Chairs the United Nations Working Group of Experts on People of African Descent, issued the following statement after this week's deaths of Philando Castile in Minnesota and Alton Sterling in Louisiana at the hands of the police, and Thursday's killing of five police officers in downtown Dallas.

"The Working Group is outraged and strongly condemns the new police killings of two African- American men. These killings which were captured on video cannot be ignored. We call for prompt independent investigations to ensure the perpetrators are prosecuted and punished.

We also condemn the attacks on police officers in Dallas and call for the perpetrators to be held accountable.

Excessive use of force by the police against African Americans in the United States is a regular occurrence. African Americans are reportedly shot at more than twice the rate of white people.

The Working Group is monitoring the situation and has repeatedly expressed its concern to the United States Government about police killings of African Americans and called for justice. The Working Group is convinced that the root of the problem lies in the lack of accountability for perpetrators of such killings despite the evidence.

The killings also demonstrate a high level of structural and institutional racism. The United States is far from recognizing the same rights for all its citizens. Existing measures to address racist crimes motivated by prejudice are insufficient and have failed to stop the killings.

It is time, now, for the US Government to strongly assert that Black lives matter and prevent any further killings as a matter of national priority."

NOTE TO EDITORS:

The UN Working Group of Experts on People of African Descent carried out an official visit to the US in January 2016. In its preliminary observations* to the US Government, the panel of experts noted with concern "the alarming levels of police brutality and excessive use of lethal force by law enforcement officials committed with impunity," and made a number of specific recommendations, among them:

"Improving reporting of violations involving the excessive use of force and extra-judicial killings by the police, and ensure that reported cases of excessive use of force are independently investigated; that alleged perpetrators are prosecuted and, if convicted, punished with appropriate sanctions; that investigations are re-opened when new evidence becomes available; and that victims or their families are provided with remedy."

The Working group will present a comprehensive report containing its findings and recommendations to the UN Human Rights Council in September 2016.

The Working Group of Experts on People of African Descent was established on 25 April 2002 by the then Commission on Human Rights, following the World Conference against Racism held in Durban in 2001. It is composed of five independent experts: Mr. Ricardo A. Sunga III (the Philippines) current Chair-Rapporteur; Ms. Mireille Fanon Mendes-France (France), Mr. Ahmed Reid (Jamaica); Mr. Sabelo Gumedze (South Africa); and Mr. Michal Balcerzak (Poland). The Working Group is part of what is known as the Special Procedures of the Human Rights Council. Special Procedures, the largest body of independent experts in the UN Human Rights system, is the general name of the Council's independent fact-finding and monitoring mechanisms. Special Procedures mandate-holders are independent human rights experts appointed by the Human Rights Council to address either specific country situations or thematic issues in all parts of the world. They are not UN staff and are independent from any government or organization. They serve in their individual capacity and do not receive a salary for their work. Learn more, log on to:

UN ACCOUNTABILITY PLEDGE

The next Secretary-General faces the challenge of making the UN more accountable, especially to the vulnerable populations that peacekeeping missions are sent to protect. Recent accountability crises in UN peacekeeping have tarnished the UN's reputation and imperiled its ability to effectively promote human rights and the rule of law. Two ongoing crises particularly require urgent action:

- Despite an official policy of zero tolerance of sexual exploitation and abuse by UN peacekeepers and staff, the UN has been rocked by a series of scandals that expose widespread sexual exploitation and abuse of vulnerable civilians that peacekeepers are sent to protect. Ongoing failures of the UN system to prevent, investigate and punish the abuse and provide justice to the victims amplify the crisis.
- Despite overwhelming evidence that UN peacekeepers are responsible for the introduction of cholera to Haiti, which has sparked a devastating epidemic that has affected over 800,000 people to date, the UN has not accepted responsibility or provided remedies to those harmed by the epidemic.

The undersigned civil society organizations share a vision of a more just and stable world. We believe in the need for a strong and effective United Nations to realize that vision. Accordingly, we call upon the candidates for UN Secretary-General to pledge their commitment to building a more accountable and transparent United Nations by signing the following pledge:

ACCOUNTABILITY PLEDGE

I recognize that if I am selected as the next Secretary-General, I will be personally entrusted with fostering a stronger, more effective United Nations. I recognize that accountability and transparency are vital to safeguarding the UN's role as a promoter of human rights and rule of law.

Accordingly, if selected to serve as the next Secretary-General of the UN, I commit to the following:

1. I pledge to make improved UN accountability, transparency and ethical integrity a key personal priority.
2. I pledge to work with Member States to ensure that what Secretary-General Ban described as a "culture of impunity" around sexual exploitation and abuse is replaced by an impartial, accessible and effective accountability mechanism.
3. I pledge to ensure that principles of immunity are not misused to shield UN peacekeeping personnel from accountability for sexual exploitation and abuse.
4. I pledge to ensure that victims of cholera in Haiti have access to fair remedies.
5. I pledge to work with Member States to secure immediate support for the control and elimination of cholera in Haiti.

Signed by:

NEWS RELEASE

USA: Inequality casts dark shadow over exercise of assembly and association rights, UN expert says

GENEVA / WASHINGTON, DC (28 July 2016) – The United States of America is struggling to live up to its ideals in the area of racial, social and economic inequality, which is having a negative impact upon the exercise of the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association, United Nations human rights expert Maina Kiai said at the end of his first official fact-finding mission to the country*.

The UN Special Rapporteur on the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association singled out race as a particularly pernicious issue. He emphasised that while his mandate does not cover racial discrimination, it was impossible carry out his mission “without issues of racism pervading the discussions.”

“Racism and the exclusion, persecution and marginalization that come with it, affect the enabling environment for the exercise of association and assembly rights,” Mr. Kiai said, noting that understanding its context means looking back at 400 years of slavery and post-Civil War Jim Crow laws which “enforced segregation and marginalized the African-American community to a life of misery, poverty and persecution.”

In more recent times, the Special Rapporteur noted, “old philosophies of exclusion and discrimination were reborn, cloaked in new and euphemistic terms,” such as the so-called “War on Drugs” and “three strikes” sentencing policies. The effects of harsh law-and-order policies often snowball, he added, with a minor criminal conviction – or even an arrest at a protest without substantiated charges –making it difficult to find a job, secure a student loan or find a place to live.

“There is justifiable and palpable anger in the black community over these injustices. It needs to be expressed,” he stressed. “This is the context that gave birth to the non-violent Black Lives Matter protest movement and the context in which it must be understood.”

The independent expert also highlighted a long list of other issues affecting the environment in which association and assembly rights are exercised – including economic inequality, unnecessarily aggressive and militarized policing at some peaceful assemblies, intimidation of activists, lack of accountability for rights violations, permit requirements for protests, disproportionate counter-terrorism measures, increasing corporate power and “a free market fundamentalist culture that actively discourages unionization.”

“The situation of migrant workers throughout the United States is characterized by the precariousness and exploitation of their employment situation, retaliation for drawing attention to adverse working conditions and a fear of taking action to seek improvement of the violations,” he said.

“Migrant workers are routinely subjected to harassment, intimidation, physical, sexual and psychological abuse, with those attempting to form or belonging to unions and organizations such as the Congress of Day Laborers being targeted for reprisals,” the expert noted.

Mr. Kiai also drew attention to the H2B work visa program, which gives employers “immense control over the employee.” He called the arrangement “not dissimilar to the Kafala system of bonded labor practiced in a number of countries in the Gulf region.”

The independent expert further noted the lack of robust labor rights protections as a major hurdle to exercising the right to freedom of association in the workplace.

“I was shocked to see that in states such as Mississippi, the lack of unionization and ability to exploit workers is touted as a great benefit for employers,” he said, citing the situation at a Nissan plant in Canton, MS, as a prime example. “The figure that stands out for me is this: Nissan reportedly operates 44 major plants throughout the world; all of them are unionized, except for two of them in the US south. Why not Mississippi?”

But the Special Rapporteur called the United States a “nation of struggle and resilience,” and had high praise the civil society sector, calling it one of the country’s greatest strengths and it is something that the United States and its people should be thankful for.

He also noted that people continue to protest despite severe restrictions and harsh crackdowns in some areas, and emphasized the role that the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and association can play in uniting societies and in healing them.

“People have good reason to be angry and frustrated at the moment,” he said. “And it is at times like these when robust promotion of assembly and association rights are needed most. These rights give people a peaceful avenue to speak out, engage in dialogue with their fellow citizens and authorities, air their grievances and hopefully settle them.”

During his 17-day visit, Mr. Kiai met numerous officials at the federal, state and local levels and members of civil society. His visit included stops in Washington, New York, Baltimore, Ferguson, MO, Cleveland, Phoenix, New Orleans, Baton Rouge, Jackson, MS, and Philadelphia.

A final report on the visit will be presented to the Human Rights Council in June 2017.

IADL, International Association of Democratic Lawyers, is a Non-Governmental Organization (NGO) with consultative status to ECOSOC and represented at UNESCO and UNICEF. The IADL was founded in 1946 by a gathering of lawyers who had survived the war against fascism and participated in the Nuremberg Trials.

The International Review of Contemporary Law is a digital legal journal published by IADL. It does not follow the mainstream, but instead analyzes legal questions in their cultural, economical, political and social context.

From the Editor

The second issue of the Review is dedicated to the 70th Anniversary of the United Nations Charter—"The United Nations Charter: History, Violation, Enforcement."

Roland Weyl details the history of the Charter and argues that there is no alternative authority besides the Charter. The Charter is an indispensable and necessary instrument of international law. Lawyers must use their legal skills to guarantee the sovereignty of peoples.

Marjorie Cohn describes the manner in which the US has tried to manipulate the United Nations System from its founding through the present time, including a critical analysis of the "Responsibility to Protect."

Norman Peach also outlines the history of the Charter and asks whether it is "out of fashion." He concludes it is not.

Robert Charvin demonstrates with examples how the Charter is bent, ignored and violated and calls for action.

Géraud de Geouffre de la Pradelle analyzes the contradictions ambiguity of using the Charter vis-à-vis Palestine.

Adda Bekkouché examines in his contribution on the Atlantic Treaty the issues of sovereignty of peoples and the public power of the state.

Dinorah la Luz Feliciano explains in her essay that the United States of America has always manipulated the Charter. She examines Art.73 (e) of the Charter and the political status of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

Phyllis Bennis reunites in her comment the Climate talks in Paris, the UN, terrorism and the Global War on Terror and concludes that the people want their United Nations and their UN Charter.

We have lost Gavrilow Josip Chiuzbaian of Romania following a long illness.

Selçuk Kozagaçlı from Turkey has joined us as a new member.

And last but not least Marjorie Cohn (USA) is a member.

De l'éditrice

Le deuxième numéro de la Revue est consacré au 70ème anniversaire de la Charte des Nations Unies sous le titre — „La Charte des Nations Unies – son histoire, sa violation, sa mise en oeuvre (son imposition)“.

Roland Weyl détaille l'histoire de la Charte et argue qu'il n'y pas une autorité alternative à la Charte. La Charte a fondé le droit international sur la base de la souveraineté des peuples et les juristes doivent aider les peuples à exercer cette souveraineté.

Marjorie Cohn décrit la manière par laquelle les États Unis ont essayé de manipuler le système des Nations Unies depuis sa création jusqu'à nos jours, en incluant une analyse critique de la „Responsabilité de protéger“.

Norman Paech esquisse également l'histoire de la Charte et se demande si elle n'est pas „démodée“. Il conclut que non.

Robert Charvin démontre par des exemples comment la Charte est contournée, ignorée et réclame l'action. Adda Bakkouche examine dans sa contribution sur le traité transatlantique les questions de la souveraineté des peuples et de la puissance publique de l'État.

Géraud Geouffre de la Pradelle analyse la contradiction et l'ambiguïté de l'utilisation de la Charte à l'égard de la Palestine.

Adda Bakkouche examine dans sa contribution sur le traité transatlantique les questions de la souveraineté des peuples et de la puissance publique de l'État.

Dinorah La Luz Feliciano explique dans son essai que les États-Unis d'Amérique ont toujours manipulé la Charte. Elle examine l'Art.73 e de la Charte et le statut politique du Commonwealth du Puerto Rico.

Phyllis Bennis réunit dans son commentaire les négociations sur le climat à Paris, les Nations Unies et la Guerre Globale contre la Terreur and conclut que les peuples veulent leurs Nations Unies et leur Charte des Nations Unies.

Notre comité a perdu Yosip Gavrilov Chiuzbaian (Roumanie) après une longue maladie.

Selçuk Kozagaçlı (Turquie) a été coopté et last but not least Marjorie Cohn (États- Unis) est également un nouveau membre.
